Southwest Virginia Flood Relief

Robert Johnson, Community Services Director for the Potomac Conference of Seventh-day Adventists headquartered in Staunton, Va., announced today that assistance to flood victims in southwest Virginia is still continuing.

Thirty-six volunteers from throughout Virginia represented the Seventh-Day Adventist Community Services program.

Two distributing centers and three mobile units were in operation during relief efforts. The three mobile units served the towns of Big Stone Gap, Coeburn, Norton, Appalachia, Fort Blackmore, Pennington Gap and St. Charles, Virginia. Distributing centers are still in operation at Big Stone Gap and Norton.

At last count 1,800 blankets and over 25,000 articles of clothing have been given to victims in the flood area. At the present time $7,000 has been expended for materials and services.

The conference mobile unit is still operating in Grundy County distributing blankets.

Mrs. Tove Oster of Dunnsville, Va., near Tappahannock, State Community Services Federation leader, set up the clothing centers. Adjoining states suffering flood damage were aided by Adventist Community Service depots in Parkersburg, West Virginia, Nashville, Tennessee, and Dalton, Ga.

Local Adventist Community Service Centers pre-process, sort and pack clothing and personal item kits for disaster victims. In many communities the Red Cross turns clothing distribution operations over to Adventists.

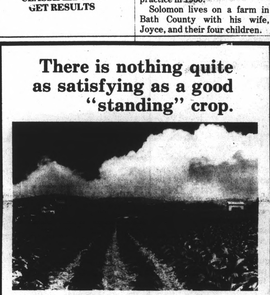
There is nothing quite as satisfying as a good "standing" crop.



But a destructive hailstorm can ruin that crop in seconds. High winds can severely damage a dwelling, barn, or other building. Lightning loss is a big concern at this time of year.
